To Whom It May Concern:

Leadership is both an art and science, but most importantly, it is a call to use your gifts to serve others. Ms. Moore spent four years providing motivational, emotional and strategic supports and services to children to prepare them for success in life and providing similar support to teachers and her colleagues as they sought to cultivate relationships with their students and the school community. I have direct knowledge of Ms. Moore's work and craft as an administrator from our time working together at Riverview Gardens High School and our interactions in the school community.

As the former Associate Principal, now Principal, at Riverview Gardens High School, I was able to work closely with Ms. Moore on a number of instructional and administrative efforts from facilitating conversations about creative ways to engage our young ladies to collaborating on professional learning communities. I have come to greatly appreciate and admire her work as not only an Assistant Principal, but a colleague whom is ready to walk in her purpose for leadership. From my view as the Associate Principal, I believe Ms. Moore's academic background and promotion of the concepts of differentiated instruction, instructional leadership, professional learning communities, building relationships and community, reflect a belief that changes the perspective of teachers and have the potential to directly impact student engagement, achievement, and, as a result, behaviors.

Ms. Moore led the English Language Arts PLC at Riverview Gardens High School and played an essential part of establishing the culture and work habits around embedded professional development, the use of protocols, and analysis of student work and assessments. She often facilitated our late start Wednesday weekly development sessions and is as adept at listening as she is at asking probing questions to push teachers to reflect and reconsider their positions. Ms. Moore's ability to engage members of her team in various topics is met with a tone and style that is both personable and focused all at the same time.

I believe that a personable nature is key to opening up opportunities for important conversations, especially around teaching practice and student success, but also in bringing together a team around a unified vision. Whether the topic was data and assessment, Response to Intervention, professional learning communities or restorative justice practices, Ms. Moore worked hard to put initiatives into the context of doing what is best for scholars.

I applaud Ms. Moore's work with the staff and students of Riverview Gardens High School and her work as an Assistant Principal. I recommend her, without hesitation, for a position as an administrator with your organization. She will be an asset as a member of your school's team.

In leadership,

Traci Nave
